Both documents deal with ~~both~~ the opportunities and the obstacles that participating in sport offer women and girls. While Rachel Hall focuses on the impact of sport on career, Jeremy Wilson is less optimistic as he argues that the sell-off of playing-fields is a threat for sport practice.

Participating in sport offer women // and girls both career and economic opportunities. Sport acces through playing-fields is a key factor to promote self-realization. Community facilities motivate people to get outside in order to ~~workout~~ make sport. Jill Scott argues that playing fields enabled her to make it to the top in her sport career. According // to Rachel Hall girls who make sport in the UK are more likely to hold a top jobs. These jobs require stamina, and sport can help develop resilience after hard times. Not only can sport promote professional opportunities but also it can allow economic benefits by increasing people's productivity.

Nevertheless, women and // girls are facing obstacles in their sport practices. On the one hand, they are less likely to play sport due to both misogynistic attitudes and lack of opportunities. Even in their practices, while boys are more likely to play team sports, girls opt for solo sports leading to the widening of gender inequalities in leadership skills. On the other hand, Jeremy Wilson contend that the sell-off of community sport facilities represents a massive obstacle to their future access to sport.

All things considered, participating in sport offer women and girls both opportunities and obstacles. The future will depend on our capacity to achieve equal opportunities.

The female Tour de France is divided in nine steps while the F. male Tour de France have 21 steps. For less Therefore, far less bonuses are delt for the sprints and the lines.

/.../ Both races are not benefiting exactly from the sames sponsorships. They are less and pay less for the female Tour de France because the event is still very young. This was only the fourth edition. Before investing, firms want to be sure about the product exposure.

/.../ Nevertheless, the future remains mostly optimistic. Female cyclism is progressing fast. A minimum wage is now granted. Huge sponsorships arrived these last years. More famous races are progressing and enable a better global exposure.

The Tour de France ~~knows~~ is facing a growing succes personnaly. There were more people in front of the roads this year and a lot of people watching at television before everythings.

"We need to break down the barriers that tell young girls they don't belong." — Dana Strong. While media coverage of female athletes is on the rise, the gender pay gap remains impressive. Therefore, it raises the next question: to what extent are women likely to achieve equal opportunities in sport? I contend that the growing visibility of women's sports represents a step ahead to achieve equal opportunities, but this alone will not fully close the gender gap. 50

According to France Info Radio France female athletes in cyclism are gaining global exposure fast. Therefore, they don't worry about the current gender pay gap in this sport as it could easily be explained by the ~~to~~ young age of key events involving women. The growth perspectives of this industry is are important, which can narrow the gap fast. Moreover, I argue that this growing visibility can create a virtuous circle in girls attitudes. Watching female athletes can help break down the barriers through a positive influence on young girls. The Cartoon by Matt published on The Telegraph 100 150 highlight that some sports are reserved to men in people's minds. In my view, broadcasters represent a crucial opportunity in this process as they can narrow the gap through women's representation in order to achieve equal opportunities.

Nevertheless, I maintain that broadcasters alone can not fully ~~fighten~~ close the sport gender gap. What block the most equal opportunities in sport for years are misogynistic attitudes toward women. They make it difficult for women to play sports such as rugby or football. According to Parity.co, ~~female~~ men's salaries remain x24 higher than women one's among the highest-paid athletes in 2024, in spite of the increasing visibility of women's sports. This is why ~~equal opportunities need~~ concrete actions need to be taken in order to build a fairer society. For instance The Daily Telegraph argues that the protection of playing-fields, which is a key factor of equal opportunities in sports, depends on government's decisions.

Ultimately, the current situation seems optimistic as the media industry promotes the visibility of women's sports. Now, women and girls need to wait spes contra spem government decisions in order to fully close the gap.
